Receptacles for keeping foods are usually few at first, but will accumulate rapidly later on. The grocery stores provide many articles in small quantities in tin boxes and glass jars, which are useful after their contents are consumed. Light housekeepers must depend upon the groceries and markets to keep their supplies rather than attempt to store large quantities. Among the groceries of greatest service are prepared flour, beef extract, boneless salt fish, cereals, shredded wheat biscuit, pulverized gelatine, the granulated tapiocas. It is interesting to notice the tendency in city groceries toward small packages of all sorts, and to see the pile of pound and two-pound bags of sugar already done up for those who purchase in small quantities. A two-quart saucepan with closely fitting cover, a tiny frying-pan, a measure cup, wooden spoon, paring knife and steel fork, with a few...
