FROM LITHEND TO THE GEY staSr SIRS. Sunday, July 23rd. In camp in the home-mead at VOllr. E had given out that we wanted to buy horses yesterday, so this morning about breakfast time there was quite a horse-fair in our camp: we bought about half-a-dozen, making up our full number of thirty with one over, a little mare Evans fancied, and speculated in privately. J6n came in to say good-bye, bringing me a book that Magnusson had noticed at his room, an 18th century Icelandic poet, rather rare I believe. We all thought Jon a very good fellow and were quite sorry to part with him. So to saddle and off, on a grey cold overcast day threatening rain; Faulkner in poor spirits and obviously not very well. We ride west along the sides of the Lithe, and after...
