They call this silver-washing. A great part of the inhabitants of the town live by it; and they say it is good enough for the present, and will do until the mines are worked regularly as they used to be. They take out from three to six dollars a day, according to their industry and skill. Unfortunately for the poor people, the owners of the furnaces make most of the profit. As this was the first time we had ever heard of washing for silver, our curiosity was so greatly moved that we stopped to investigate the modus operandi of the novelty. Nothing could be simpler. The operator provides himself with a crowbar, a shovel, and a cow-skin. This latter he fashions into a water-tight basin by stretching it upon a square frame. Filling it with water, he stands over...
